THE HON. W. C. WHITNEY EXPRESSES HIS JUDGMENT THAT NAVAL OFFICERS FAMILIES

Should Not be Permitted to Live at the utions or on Board Ship.

Since the recent tragedy at Yokohama and the consequent imprisonment of a United States naval officer on the charge of murder, the custom of having the families of naval officers at their stations has been discussed and varied opinions have been expressed, some upholding and some condemning it. Within a few days THE SUN reporter called or the Hon. William C. Whitney, lately Secretary of the Navy, and obtained his views regarding this subject. In order to secure a comprehensive statement the reporter asked Mr. Whitney the following speciale question, which was supplemented by others of a like tenor;

Do you or do you not believe it expedient that the headquarters of our naval squadrons should be at such points that the officers can take their wives there and live with them?" Mr. Whitney said that the custom had caused a great deal of trouble in the past and that he did not favor it, and that he did not believe it would be expedient to allow commanding officers of vessels, and perhaps others, to take their wives and families with them on cruises. When I took charge of the Navy Department," he said, "a difficulty of considerable dimensions, caused by an act of a naval offieer bearing upon this subject, had stirred my predecessor to anger. Then, as now, the fam lies of officers detriled to certain stations were in the habit of living at the stations. In the case I refer to quite a colony of officers' families had been formed at one of the European ports. A great deal of gossip developed among the women, and the wife of an officer was foolish enough to criticise sharply some action of Secretary Chandler. Her remark was in some way repeated to him, and it greatly incensed him. He thereupon issued an order forbidding the wives of officers from fellowing them to their stations. His power to enforce such an order was, perhaps, open to question, but it interfered considerably with the custom. One officer who allowed his sife to follow him was transferred from the name of this officer, but he held a very high rank-was, I think, an Admiral or Commodore. "It would be all right, perhaps, to allow the wives of officers to congregate at certain ports which are headquarters of the squadrons if they were all practical, sensible women. Unfortunately, all women are neither practical per sensible. For every woman who would be prudent, reasonable, and easily satisfied there would be a dozen who would find fault and talk too freely. To have the women and children aboard ship would be even more harmful. In the first place, their presence would destroy discipline. You cannot have proper discipline with women and children around, and discipline is the most necessary detail of naval life. Again, while it is true that judicious wife of the commanding officer might beautify and elevate the of the cabin and ameliorate the rigors of life aboard ship, yet it is quite as possible will lack tact and judgment. and endless bickerings and gossip will result. If other officers' wives were admitted aboard also it would almost certainly result in jealousies and worriments. The officers' minds would never be free from domestic cares, when they ought to be devoted entirely to their official duties. Furthermore, there is no room on any of our ships for women. However it may have been in the early days of the navy, when wooden sailing vessels were used, at present the space on all our ships has to be greatly economized. Take the cruiser New York, for instance. Her officers and crew number 400 men. They have less room to their personal use than my house affords. If you were to investigate you would find that they have to crowd a great deal to find room for all. It would be impossible to put women desirable European station to the objectionable service on the Gumea coast. I forget the and children into such crowded quarters. "The present arrangement divides the majority of the naval vessels into a number of squadrons for different stations. They are the North Atlantic station, the South Atlantic station, the Asiatic station, and the Pacific station. The rule in sending a ship to any of these is to make the detail for a period of three years. This gives rise to a great deal of favortism, and when I was at the head of the navy I found that one of the most difficult problems. Under our system, however, it is impossible to avoid it. The most desirable station in Lif time was the European, the divisions being somewhat different then. This gave the offcers practically a three-years' trip- to Europe under the most favorable circumstances. The ships made their rendezvous at some interesting point with plenty of society and opportunity for enjoyment. The least desirable station is that along the South merican coast, known as the South Atlantic station, with little to see or do and a great deal of uncomfortable weather. The office: who is sent to the European station considers that he has a three years' holiday, while the one who goes to South America looks upor his work as being in the nature of punishment. In addition, some ships were detailed for special service. I have considered the subject, and if I were to have the say I would make a complete change in the details. Instead of sending one ship here and others there I would send them all around the world. In three years' time each vessel could make a careful, deliberate circumnavigation giving each officer the opportunity to become fully acquainted with the various coasts, bays, and ports of the world. There could then be no cry of favoritism, for all would be served alike. Besides, the officers would be greatly liberalized by the educating influence of contact with different peoples. My idea would be to have them spend some time at the leading ports, so that their knowledge of the geography would be perfected by personal observation. There is nothing like travel to broaden a man. Just compare the naval officer who has travelled from station to station, to the army officer whose time has been spent chiefly in camp on the frontier. I do not wish to say anything disparaging to army, but the difference between these two is apparent at a glance. The officers of havy do not really suffer very much through being separated from their families. At present they are joined usually by their families at the headquarters of the North Atlantic, Facific, or Asiatic station, and they see a great deal of them while the vessels are not cruising. If my plan were adopted, they could meet at the leading ports, where vessels would remain for some time. As far as the officers are concerned, I should say that they like to have their families meet them. The expense of living abroad is not great, and I suppose that is one inducement. Even if the officers could not see their families during these cruises the hardship would not be so very great, for the sea duty is alternated with shore service of the same duration, such as service in the navy yards, the Naval Academy, and the Naval reau at Washington. My experience prove that the officers are always ready to take their turn at sea duty after the three years of shore officer attempted to evade this." The John J. O'Hrien Men's Reception and

MOSS WILL CONTEST.

Witnesses Tell How Ralph and David Mos Treated their Mother. Ralph Moss, the witness whom ex-Judge Rollins wanted so badly at Thursday's hearing of the Moss will contest, showed up yesterday In Surrogate Bansom's court, and was the first witness. The millionaire pawnbroker left a life interest in his estate to his wife which at her death was to go to his sons. By Mrs-Moss's will she left all her property, including her accumulations from the life interest in he usband's estate, to the sons. The daughters are contesting her will on the ground of undue ters receive but $200 each by the will. Ralph Moss explained that after leaving his house for court he was taken with a hemorrhage at breakfast in a restaurant, and was obliged to return home. He denied that he was drunk, as contestant's counsel had intimated on Thursday. His testimony was about affuence on the part of the sons. The daugh-was drunk, as contestant's counsel had intimated on Thursday. His testimony was about sums of money which he said he had given to his mother.

Henry Moss, Ralph's brother, gave the details of the accounts with his mother from 1874 to her death. He had always given his mother all the money that belonged to her.

Mary McCabe, a servant in Mrs. Moss's employ for six months before her death last September, testified that Ralph lived with his mother at that time, and was drunk nearly all the time. He abused his mother and swore at her. Mrs. Moss had told witness that Ralph and Tillie (Mrs. Matiida Karl, his cousin would break her heart with their "goings on."
Witness explained that "goings on" meant living together in the house. At one time, she said, Tillie had pinched Mrs. Moss's face until blood streamed all over it, because Mrs. Moss had objected to her spending the night in Ralph's room. When she ordered Tillie out of the house Ralph would bring her back. When Mrs. Moss spoke to Ralph about his relations with Tillie he called his mother a liar, and told her to mind her damned business. Tillie used to steal the eggs and fruit Mrs. Moss's grandchildren brought to her. When she wasn't with Ralph she was taking baths. On crossexamination the witness denied having told her sister that Mr. Cohen, a son-in-law of the decedent, had promised her a new dress and to keep her in his employ if she would testify
against the Moss boys.

The sister, who was in court, jumped to her

against the Moss boys.

The sister, who was in court, jumped to her fest and shouted:

Yes slie did. She—"

"No! no! no!" interrupted Lawyer Henry; you keep still. I'll give you a chance later. Nathan Baron, formerly sexton of the East Twenty-ninth Street Synagogue, an undertaker and nurse for Mr. Moss for the month before him death, testified that during Mr. Moss's sickness he heard David Moss tell his mother that he had crased the names of his sisters from his father's will. When Mrs. Moss's sickness he heard David Moss tell his mother that he had crased the names of his sisters from his father's will. When Mrs. Moss and this was a crime, that his father wasn't dead yot, David replied:

"Well, he soon will be:

and said the girls shouldn't have a cent, as they were "only sucking around to get the money." David got drunk while his father's dead body was in the house.

Annie Bass, a grandniece of the decedent, said that once when the servant was away her aunt was obliged to cook the supper. The pie was not well cooked, and when Halph tasted the threw it at his mother and told her to go to the devil with her piea.

Mrs. Julia Lippman, a granddaughter of Mrs. Moss, testified that her grandmother said that her sons had caused her so much trouble about the $6,000 she had given her daughters on their father's death that she had decided to do as they said, as she could no longer hold out against them. Surrogate Hansom adjourned the hearing until Wednesday.

CRANK LINGEMANN AGAIN.

Abandoning Cornelius Vanderbilt, He Has Been Ringing Jay Gould's Bell.

During the last two weeks a smooth-faced young man has made frequent calls at the house of Mr. Jay Gould at 579 Fifth avenue. asking to see Miss Helen Gould. He generally abused the butler, but was not violent, and Capt. Waits, in whose precinct Mr. Gould lives, was not notified. Besides, Mr. Gould employs three private watchmen.

Last Thursday night the man called at the house and was admitted by a servant, who thought she recognized him as a caller, but his stay was very short. On Sunday night he called again, and wanted to be admitted to the house. He said that Miss Belen Gould had sent him a letter. Butler Smith put him off, and told him to call at half-past 10 o'clock on Monday morning. They would make an arrangement for him, he said. This appeared to satisfy him, and so, according to the arrangement, he called at the house yesterday morning, getting there at twenty minutos to 1.

Inspector Byrnes had been notified, and he sent Detective Sergeants McCloskey and Crownet him in the hall and arrested him.

When arraigned in the Yorkville Police Court in the afternoon he said his name was John J. Lingemann. He is 21 years old, and lives, he says, at 616 East Eleventh street. He said he was a clerk in the Westchester Fire Insurance Company at 68 Wall street, and a member of the New York Athletic Club. Butler Smith made the complaint, and Justlee White sent him to Bellevus Hospital for examination as to his sanity. his stay was very short. On Sunday night he him to Bellevue Hospital for examination as to his sanity.

Mr. Gould, Miss Helen Gould, and other members of the family have been out of town for some time, and are at present at El Paso.

Lingemann is the crank whom Policeman Southworth arrested on Sunday night, Dec. 27, near Cornelius Vanderbilt's house. Southworth said Lingemann had told him he wanted to get Mr. Sanderbilt's brains and have them examined by a doctor. He wanted to discover the difference between his own brain and Mr. Vanderbilt's, and lears why a Vanderbilt could make so much more money than he could. For some time previous to that incident he had been in the Bloomingdale Asylum.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

The New York, Providence and Boston

New Haven, March 28.-The lease of the New York, Providence, and Boston Railroad by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company has more significance than appears upon the surface. The New York New Haven and Hartford is preparing itself against encroachment upon the part of the New York and New England Railroad, and the move is directed more especially against this line. General Manager Tuttle said to-day:

"The New York and New England road has been endeavoring to secure entrance into New York, with a view of diverting traffic from our road. It is but natural, therefore, that the New York, New England and Hartford road should make arrangements to be independent of the New England, and with the arrangement already made we are able to reach within thirty-three miles of Boston. By the way of Springfield we are ninety-eight miles from Boston, and by the Air Line route, by the way of Willimantic, we are compelled to traverse eighty-six miles over the New England. Now, if the occasion requires, you see, we shall be able to cover almost the entire distance on our own lines without resorting to the New England and at the same time help to pay dividends on our own steck. It is scarcely expected that our road would throw traffic in the way of a rival corporation, and therefore you can draw your own inferences whether or not the arrangement with the New England will be continued."

Mr. J. W. Miller, late general manager of the New York, Providence and Boston Railroad, has been appointed second Vice-President of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

THE BALLOT LAW VIOLATED.

REPUBLICAN FRAUDS IN THE TOWN OF WHITEHALL, WASHINGTON COUNTY.

Facts Proved in the Collins. Derby Contested Election Case-Money Paid to Voters and Ballots Marked for IdentiSeation by Making a Pin Hole in the Letter "O" of the Word "Of," as it Appears in the Endorsement on the Official Ballot.

TROY, March 28 .- The briefs in the Collins Derby contested election case were placed in the hands of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-night, and for the first time since the beginning of the contest information of a most startling character has been revealed. It demonstrates in the most positive manner the deliberate intention of the Republican leaders in Washington county to nullify the provisions of the Ballot Reform law, and to give them (in Whitehall at least) absolute proof of the nature of the ticket cast by each voter. During the progress of the inrestigation Judge Whitman, one of Mr. Collins's counsel, received an anonymous letter stating that while it would not be judicious or the writer's part to disclose his identity, he nevertheless knew as matter of fact that a careful scrutiny of the ballots used in White hall would show that they had been designedly

Evidently the unknown correspondent kept close watch of the investigation, and not noticing any evidence on this subject again wrote Judge Whitman. In his second letter he expressed regret that he did not feel that he could with safety reveal his name, and said that he feared that no attention had been paid to his previous note because of its anonymous nature. Then he went on to say that the Judge was familiar with Washington county politics, and if he would reflect for a while he night recall something that would aid him to discover the means of identification used. By strange coincidence it remained for ex-Con gressman Burleigh of Whitehall to furnish the missing link. Mr. Burleigh is known as clever story teller, and misses no opportunity to sustain his reputation in that direction. Especially is he happy when politics is the subject of his narrative. Recently he met Judge Whitman and others, and election events were discussed. The integrity of certain persons was brought into question, and Mr. Burleigh remarked:

We know how to find out when a man is 'crooked' up our way."
"How do you do it?" was asked.

Well, it's a good story and I'll tell you Five or six years ago a man in my town was a candidate for an important office. Among those who professed to be among his most earnest supporters was a man whose fidelity the nominee questioned. He determined to apply a test. On the day before election he gave the suspected worker a package of $200 in new $2 bills, but before turning them over to him punctured each bill with a pin, driving the point through one eye of the head of the vignette. On the morning following the election the candidate who was defeated began his search to ascertain whether he had done the worker an injustice. He knew where the man did his banking business, so taking $200 in $10 bills he went there and asked if he could get $2 bills in exchange. 'Cas accommodate you very handily,' said the cashing.' Mr. — was just here and left this package of $200 in new $2 bills.' The defeated candidate took the package and, lo! it contained the identical bills that he had given Mr. — less than forty-eight hours before."

Everybody in the party laughed, and none more heartily than Judge Whitman. The returns filed by the Whitehall inspectors with the County Clerk, Town Clerk, and supervisor had been placed in the hands of the Senate officers for safe keeping. Mr. Whitman visited Albany, examined the Republican sample bailots, and fyund on every such bailot on each of the three sets of returns a pinhole through the letter "o" of the word "of" on the endorsement of the bailot. On this point the brief says:

These bailots were endersed: "Official bailet for district of Whitchall, Nov. 3, 1891. Redney Van Wormer is a Republican. He provered the bailots to be printed as the law provided. So far as it appears he caused them to be distributed to the different from Clerks, and by the latter they were given out in sealed packages to the different merring of election, as discipled in the case of the condition of gave the suspected worker a package of $200 in new $2 bills, but before turning them over to the respective returns produced by them, and that the official ballots on the same, attached thereto, were in the same condition as when received by each of them. This distinguishing mark thus becomes evidence, and there is sufficient before the committee to justify them in passing upon the question as to whether or no it was placed there for the purposes of identification.

Indeed, there can be hardly any question on that point, for no other motive or reason for its being placed there is conceivable. The men who did the britising of voters in Whitehall could not, in all instances, be made sure that the goods were delivered. They were determined on reversing the political record of the town. They had a motive for desiring to ascertain how the citizens voted and how the votes stood. These marks furnished a means of identification of the votes cast—no matter how the mark came there. If it may be angested these ballots, the suggestion is answered in the principle of the support of the principle of the other marked ballots and not the Republican official ballots.

The marking of Kepublican ballots would not necessarily disclose to them how Democratic ballots and not the Republican official ballots.

The marking of Kepublican ballots would not necessarily disclose to them how Democratic ballots in use by the electors, and for aught they could know the unmarked ballot, or a labor or Socialist haid, as well as a Democratic ballot. The several returns as filed, and which have attached to them samples of the official ballots, show marks upon the following, towit:

Fi Filed with the Supervisor, Second, Fourth and Fifth

"Rich with the Supervisor, Second, Fourth and Fifth districts.

The committee will notice that none of the other balots attached to the returns are thus marked. Those produced by the County Clerk have been in his possesson since they were filed with him immediately after election. The manner in which the official ballots of the several parties are attached to the three different sets of returns clearly show that this poincture was not made in attaching the hallots, nor at the time of cauvassing the votes. They bear inherent syldence of its having been done in a systematic, preconceived manner, and for an evident purpose. It was clever, if contemptible. It was shrewdly designed, even if dishonest and filegal. But one party was interested in corrying it out: but one party land a molive in doing the work. Taken in connection with the other linged acts which she had been doubt as to the purpose nor the agents in this lilegal transaction.

there can be no doubt as to the purpose nor the agents in this nilegal transaction.

During the investigation Mr. Wellington, Senator Derby's counsel, admitted that some Republican frauds had been proved, but that if the irregular votes were thrown out Mr. Derby would still have a plurality of about 200. But when he made this statement Mr. Wellington knew nothing of the marked ballots in Whitehall. He argued that where fraud had been proved the entire poll should be thrown out, although the vote for Collins had not been assailed. This argument is combated by Mr. Collins's counsel, who says that it would be manifestly unfair, without precedent, and devoid of all justice to throw out votes cast for Collins because of frauds committed in the interest of Derby.

HAS ALMY ANY CHANCE?

sel for the Murderer Seems to Think that His Sentence Was Legal.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., March 28.-Alvin Burleigh, counsel for Almy, the murdered of Christie Warden, has made public the reason why Almy waived his right to be present when sentence was passed upon him. "At the close of the trial." Mr. Burieigh says, "the popular feeling was intense. The officers had great difficulty in opening a way for Almy's exit from the court room. As he was conducted through the crowd he saw the temper of the public, and overheard some remarks that gave rise, on his part, to grave apprehensions as to his safety in case the verdict should be anything less han murder in the first degree. He was convinced that the verdict would be murder in the second degree, and he was very fearful that in case of such a decision the Sheriff would not be able to protect him from violence while he should be conveyed to the railroad station to be able to protect him from violence while he should be conveyed to the railroad station to be taken to prison in Concord. Under the circumstances the Court decided that Almy had the legal right to waive the privilege of going back into the court room to listen to the proclamation of the verdict. Upon receiving this information Almy at once brightened up and accepted the privilege.

"Soon after this new question of the legality was raised I visited Almy and explained to him in detail the situation of his case, and told him that I wished him to consider the matter carefully and to suggest freely to me what action he wished to have taken. He desired time to consider what further might be done, and I am to visit him again in a few days to learn his decision. The new question which has arisen, I admit, is a very grave one, and we are giving it the most careful attention and consideration. Thus far we have not been a le to discover any grounds or precedent that the Court was in error in its decision that Almy had the right to be absent when sentence was given. Although Almy availed himself of the privilege of the court, which was extended to him as a kindness, yet in the person of his counsel he was legally present when his sentence was pronounced."

EX-SENATOR FAIR'S PERIL.

His Narrow Escape from Asphyxiation at His Hotel. San Francisco, March 28.-It leaked out today that ex-Senator Fair came near leaving this world and his millions one night last week. He lives at the Lick House and keeps a valet, who attends to all his wants. One of the valet's duties is to turn off the gas, as Fair frequently drops asleep while reading in bed. On this night the valet turned off the gas as usual. but the stopcock must have become loose, for when the watchman passed in the hall soon after he noticed an odor of gas and investigation showed that it came from Fair's rooms.

The windows were thrown open and restoratives were applied, but it was some time before Fair revived. A few minutes more and he would have been asphyxiated. Fair prides himself on the keenness of his sense of smell, and on several occasions has been awakened by the odor of escaping gas, but this time his nose failed to warn him. but the stopcock must have become loose, for
